

Sudhir K. Samantaray

Conflict, Terrorism & Global Peace: Search for Synergy

If it is viewed globally, countries are, today, known by the enemies they make and the association or (in diplomatic parlance) the alliance they have with other countries. Therefore, no country is today shorn of the prime concern of security. The meaning scopes and need of security as well peace have become theoretically much broader and practically complex. The enormous growth of securing providers and the relationship between one another are all suggestive of a complex phenomenon. The business of the world has changed almost beyond recognition during the course of last few decades. Till date no country has been able to evolve a permanent and lasting solution to curb the effect of terrorism that is corroding the entire humanity.

An attempt has been made here to conceptualize various holistic strategies as to how to restore peace and harmony amongst both the big and small countries of the world gripped by the menace of terrorism. As a matter of fact, it is the state existing between two or more societies / groups that are vying with one another over scarce resources despite the fact that the culmination of aims of such competition is neutralizing, injuring or eliminating the competitor. The resources may belong to any aspects of human beings. Terrorism as an Ideology has been a form of action designed to influence politics and governmental behaviour.

The world is not free from the shackles of terrorism. There are many major bases of terrorist groups scattered all over the world. The attack on America on September 11, 2001, on Indian parliament on 13th December, 2001 and the Kargil influx are greatest misadventure of terrorist groups which can not be overlooked. Now that America is almost on the brink to thrust a war on Iraq over the disarmament issue. Apprehension of the repercussion of this war is being greatly felt by think tanks world over. In the contemporary world affairs, the United Nations is the focus of hopes and aspirations for a future where Individuals live in equanimity. In general, United Nations Security Council, International court, propagation of international humanitarian law, in all respects, have become salient features.

Global Governance with additional system of international decision – making and Global Action's Conflict prevention and conventional disarmament measures will not only promote disarmament but also address many global challenges like poverty, human rights violation, environmental degradation, gender, ethnicity and race discrimination. As regards the humanitarian intervention, the refusal to accept the discipline of universal norms of international humanitarian law is especially difficult to fathom in the case of a country that insists on the right to intervention.

Most of the conflict resolution methods tend to be focused on dealing with the present. But the past events as well as cultural dimension of conflict should be taken into consideration. Adequate communication is the basis of Conflict management. Embracing people of different persuasion, we need to work to build an organizational process that is based on norms and principles that are openly and commonly defined and not on gentlemanly or comradely behaviour between a few.